Mr. Beck asked him whether he had not urged the House to vote for the measure, and had not voted for it himself. Mr. Gardeld-Certainly, I voted for the convoted for it himself.

Mr. Garileid—Cortainly, I voted for the conference report, as did my friend from Maine (Mr. Haie), who opposed that clause all the while, and the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Nibiack) also signed the conference report, although he was as much opposed to it as I.

Mr. Garfield then replied to Mr. Beck on the subject of estimates and appropriations, and as to whether the sinking fund was or was not meladed in certain figures, he asserting one position and Mr. Beck insisting on the opposite position. Without the question being elucidated to the satis action of either gentleman, or being made very plain to the committee, the committee rose.

The Speaker announced that Messrs, Wheeler of New York and Tyner of Indiana, having been asked to be excussed from service on the committee to attend the Filimere obsequies, he had appointed in their places Messrs, McDougall of New York and Taylor of Indiana and that Mr. Bass of New York, whom he had appointed this morning in place of Mr. Cox, would act as Chairman of the committee, and that he had so notined him by telegraph.

The House then at half past 5 adjourned.

KATE SIODDARD'S REVELATIONS. A Strange Account of her Connection with the Condrich Tragedy-A Long Night with her Dead Husband-Her Devotion. Soon after Kate Stoddard was imprisoned n charge of complicity in the murder of Charles Goodrich in Degraw street, Brooklyn, she prepared a written account of what purported to be her full knowledge of the tragedy, and submitted it to her counsel. The lawyers laughed at the document, and told her that the insanity plea alone could save her. Since that time she says that she has had much trouble with them, and now considers herself no longer subject to the advice of counsel. Last evening she made public her story through the Brooklyn Union.

Her story begins by saying that her trunks had York, but she continued to live with him in the Degraw street house. On the night of the tragedy Goodrich entered the house at about ten o'clock, depressed and melancholy, put on his slipners and began to smoke and read a newspaper. Kate went up stairs and to bed.

THE SOUTH OYSIER BAY MURDER.

Jamaica Yesterday. Thomas W. Jones, accused of killing his half brother, Samuel J. Jones of South Oyster Justice Snedicor in Jamaica. The circumstances of the killing, as well as the social position of the brothers, give great interest to the proceed-of the killing, as well as the social position of the brothers, give great interest to the proceedings, and the court room was filled throughout the tedious testimony of Jacob S. J. Jones, brother of the prisoner. Among those present were Admiral Melancthon Smith and his wife, who is a sister of the prisoner, and William Floyd Jones, also a relative.

Alexander Hagener appeared for the prisoner. It was said before the proceedings began that detective Payne desired to have the proceedings adjourned a day or two while he gathered further testimony. But if that was his desire no such motion was made. Jacob A. J. Jones, otherwise known as Jack Jones, occupied the witness stand the entire day. He retold the story of the anonymous letters which were published in yesterday's SCN. He did not credit the supposition that his brother, the prisoner, had written them or procured them to be written. In his story of the events of the two days after the murder one fact was elicited out of which Delective Payne is endeavoring to make evidence against the prisoner. He restilled that on the first examination of the premises hookeys were found. The next morning a bunch of chest-lock keys were found that were still wet as if just land down by the person last helding them. The keys fitted none of the locks in the house just previous to the discovery of the keys, and that when the fact was noted as suspections the keys disappeared. JAYNE AGAIN.

B. G. Javne was recalled and explained the laws in relation to invoices and the required eath of the actual cost and the market value. The laws require verity and nothing more. There is no right to alter the invoices, but addition must be made to the entry to make the market value. The goods must be invoiced as purchased. Duties must be assessed on the actual value, notwithstanding the goods are purchased below the market value. He said: Gentlemen here ask the repeal of the second section of the act of 1867, which authorizes the secure of books and papers on the warrant of the District Judge, and also the repeal of the provisions giving moreties to officers and informers, the repeal of all penaltes for violations of the law after the delivery of goods, and that the decision of officers at the time of importation be conclusive for and against the importer and the Government, and that the penalty should be commensurate with the offence, and the forfeit of goods be limited to the goods not properly invoiced. These provisions were opposed, for the reason that the law is unconstitutional, because it is contrary to the sparit of the age, and unnecessarily severe and oppressive, because in its operation it has been found subject to abuses, and further that its tendency is to drive commerce out of American to foreign hands.

Mr. Jayne briefly argued the constitutional point in support of selfures of books and papers, remarking that there is a natural aversion to paying the exactions of the Government. He believed they were now on the homestretch of old times. The effects of the demoralization growing out of the war were more serious than the loss of life and blood. We are in a day of wild and extravagant speculation, and there is more evident disposition to avoid taxation than at any other time. He believed that frauds against the Government are lessening, and that there is an improvement in political and social morals. If laws are necessary at all, they are necessary to protect the revenue of the United States and to protect thorest merchants. The such frauds and frow frauts are committed, such frauds as have been called "technical errors." Obtaining a clue to frauds, he traced them to the end, and made the wrongdoers ten the truth. He produced indictments against certain men, but they had to be note prosequed because their books could not be used in criminal prosecutions. Their letters instructed their agents in Boston, New Orleans, and elsewhere how to act in order to carry out the collusions for defrauding the revenue. He referred to a large manuscript book which he had brought with him to show from it numerous cases where trauds had been committed in the method described. It had been said some Yankee has invented a process by which blood can be squeezed from a turnip, but Jayne said, "We don't know how that is done, bad as we are." The Government now loses fifteen per cent, of the revenue, notwithstanding all the inducements to prevent fraud. If the law is wrong and oppressive, repeal or revise it, but when you attempt to act for the good of the entire people, first mounter what kin rof a law is necessary to protect the Government and the bonest merchant. If the keeper of a nore corner grocery can be punished for a violation of the law, how much more should high American merchants to punished for a violation of the law, how much more should high American merchants to punished mer who have intelligence and have a clear understanding of the law?

THE WAR.

Gen. Portillo it appears is regulating the civil and religious portion of the community in Puerto Principe, as well as attending to the military affairs, and the Voz de Caba thinks it necessary to give him a vote of thanks for his exertions in behalf of the church and of all good Roman Catholics. Portillo has also taken measures to investigate the proceedings of certain people who sit around tables with the pretext of holding communion with their defunct relatives or friends. Lately in the most fertile portion of the sugar-growing districts of Sagna, bodies of volunteers from Cardenas, Signa, and San Domingo have thought they might as well fight on the side where their sympathies lay. As yet nothing has been heard of them, but no doubt before long they will give an account of themselves. Troops have been sent after them, but have not succeeded in capturing anything but three or four worm-out horses which were left behind as useless.

The Voz gives an account of an encounter with the Cubans under Calixto Garcia, and the Spaniards under Esponda and Dominguez, riving the Cuban loss as five killed, the Spanish loss being one officer and thirteen soldiers wounded.
